MEMORIAL TO THE LATE DR. WAY.

A meeting for the purpose of inaugurating a fund for the establishment of a public memorial to the late Dr. Way was held at the Town Hall Buildings on Monday afternoon, when the Hon. J. L. Stirling presided over a large attendance.

The Chairman, in explaining the object of the gathering, paid a glowing tribute to the memory of the deceased doctor, in the course of which he said:—The late Dr. Way's colleagues in his profession had been ever ready to acknowledge his aptitude in all the lines of his duty and calling, and more especially in that branch to which he had devoted the greater part of his work. To his skill in the healing art the testimony of a large and grateful circle of his patients would be spontaneously given. His work in the University, when full opportunity for its usefulness was afforded, had been of a character of which the University council could not speak too highly, and conspicuous among the staff of the University the late Dr. Way had to a great extent assisted in gaining for the medical school a reputation second to none in the Australian Commonwealth. The graduates and students in medicine would, with one accord, rise and praise the work of their dead friend. The Adelaide Hospital, the Children's Hospital, and the other benevolent institutions of South Australia had one and all shared in the gratuitous and willing work which he was ever ready in the time of his health to bestow, where suffering humanity, young, old, or needy, had by their distress claimed his services. His work had been of that quiet, unostentatious nature which claimed perhaps the higher praise, and which had been wrought out among that portion of the community upon whom suffering and sorrow had set their heavy hands. This scorching touch it had been his duty to try to lighten and alleviate, and in the heart of many a grateful patient the memory of his skill and kindly sympathy would be ever enshrined. Should there not to one of such genuine merit, in the profession which so readily appealed to their generous sympathy in its work, remain some visible and ever present recognition of the good which had marked his career? He moved—"That it is desirable to collect a fund by public subscription for the establishment of a permanent memorial to keep alive the memory and work of the late Edward W. Way, M.B., M.R.C.S."

Mr. Henry Scott seconded the motion. He referred to the generosity shown by medical men to the poor generally, and stated that Dr. Way had stood out pre-eminently even in that profession in his benevolence. He had often, on finding patients to be too poor to pay for proper attention, sent them into the private hospital at his own expense, and devoted much of his time to them while there. He thought this was highly commendable. Dr. Way's great virtue was self-sacrifice, and this had probably hastened his death. His career had been marked by sympathy, kindness, and skill.

The motion was unanimously carried. The Hon. G. Brookman thought the memorial should be raised in a perfectly voluntary and spontaneous manner. He had no doubt that sufficient money would be raised to establish a chair at the University, or at least a scholarship. He thought that whatever was done it should be in connection with the science to which Dr. Way had devoted his life. He moved—"That the memorial take the form of the endowment of a chair of gynaecology, or a scholarship at the University or such other form as the committee may determine."

Dr. Corbin seconded the motion, which was carried.

Mr. W. J. Sowden moved—"That those present form themselves into a general committee for the furtherance of the above object." He thought that any memorial which they might decide upon should emphasise the self-sacrifice which had characterised the life of the late Dr. Way. It would be impossible for them to exaggerate his good deeds. The fact that he had done good by stealth gave additional value to much of his generosity, and on this account they ought to accentuate their appreciation of his work. Like the late Dr. Campbell, he had worked ungrudgingly for the poor, and he had been a man who had lived Christianity rather than taught theology.

Dr. J. A. G. Hamilton seconded the motion, which was carried.

The following executive committee was elected:—The Hon. J. L. Stirling (President Legislative Council), Drs. Barlow, Corbin, J. A. G. Hamilton, A. A. Hamilton, Hayward, Lendon, Poniton, Professor Watson, Hon. G. Brookman, Messrs. R. Barr Smith, Henry Scott, J. G. R. Murray, W. J. Sowden, T. H. Smeaton, and C. G. Gurr.

Professor Ives left by Monday's express to act as judge in the choral competitions at Ballarat, which are expected to last several days. Professor Peterson, of Melbourne, will act in conjunction with Professor Ives. Representative Page, of Queensland, fought at Majaba Hill with Sir Hector Macdonald. The general expressed his pleasure at meeting him again in Melbourne.

Mr. W. H. Wake, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., principal of the Sydney Conservatorium, has been appointed examiner in music for the forthcoming public examinations in the theory of music and examinations for musical degrees, to be held next month by the University of Adelaide.

MUSICAL NOTES.

[By Musicians.]
Mr. A. H. Otto, the assistant organist of St. Peter's Cathedral, has composed a new string quartet in C major, three movements of which are to be presented at one of the Elder Conservatorium concerts early next month. Mr. Kugelberg, the cellist of the institution, is preparing the work, which contains a number of interesting and attractive features. The three first movements are an adagio, minuet, and scherzo. A fourth section—an allegro in C—is now being sketched by Mr. Otto, but this will not be given at the concert. Another work by this promising young composer is an evening service in E flat.

THE MEMORIAL TO DR. WAY.

To the Editor.
Sir—I attended a meeting to-day at Brookman's Buildings, when the chairman explained that in consequence of Mrs. Way's objection to a public subscription being solicited, the committee were in some difficulty. I am sure everyone will appreciate Mrs. Way's feelings. I understand her consideration for the public, who have just now so many claims upon their resources; but, sir, I also feel sure there are hundreds in this State who, though perhaps not able to write a cheque, would gladly give their mite out of the love and gratitude they bear to Dr. Way. Will you kindly allow me to suggest through "The Advertiser" that any small sums in stamps I shall gladly take charge of, and that these sums being given without solicitation will thus attain the object we have in view in the best possible way.—I am, &c.,
EMILY G. NESBITT.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Among the most important subjects now under the consideration of the Adelaide Chamber of Commerce, which will hold its half-yearly meeting to-day, is the advancement of the educational status of those engaged in commercial work. The recognition of commerce as a subject for education by the University and other scholastic institutions of South Australia has made substantial progress since the matter was referred to in "The Register" a few months ago. A proposed scheme of instruction and examination has been under consideration by the Chamber of Commerce, as well as by the University authorities, during the last four or five months; and a rough outline of the objects aimed at was recently published in our columns. The council of the School of Mines has also sanctioned a proposal having in view the institution of classes in further commercial subjects, and the granting of certificates to those who have given proof of a prescribed standard of proficiency. A fine field of usefulness is open to both of the educational establishments mentioned in the direction of assisting those who are in charge of commercial and industrial enterprises to secure the services of thoroughly trained and capable employees. The lack of suitable agencies and inducements for ensuring efficiency among those employed in offices and other departments of commercial businesses must have been responsible for serious losses; and certainly no one who understands the progress being made in other states of the Commonwealth, and in the leading centres of Europe and America, will doubt for a moment that the penalties for backwardness in this respect will be far more severe than they have been. The Sydney Chamber of Commerce several years ago inaugurated a system of examinations intended specially for testing the fitness of youths to take places in offices, and the rapid growth in the number of candidates from year to year has amply demonstrated how greatly this step has been appreciated by those who have been seeking positions in commercial houses. The benefits have been twofold, applying not only to those who have been examined, but also to employers on the lookout for youths likely to develop into efficient men of business. We noted a few
