

9th. February 1949.

My dear Bullard,

I have just received your letter of February 1st. and should like to thank you for the proposal you make. I certainly do enjoy a visit to the States and Canada from time to time, and should greatly enjoy a visit to the School of Graduate Studies at Toronto. You say next year, and I take that literally to mean 1950, though at what time of the year will require some consideration.

I may mention that C.L. Huskins, of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. and C.H. Danforth of Stanford University, California, have been asking about the possibility of my making a visit, whereas Gertrude Cox has been anxious for some time to get me to give another course at Raleigh, North Carolina.

I do not suppose everything can be fitted in, and of course, as always happens, there will be further invitations too late to be accepted. But I am letting you know of these three, since cooperation is a great deal more comfortable than competition among those with a claim on one's time.

With love to Margaret,

Yours sincerely,
